

304
P51

THE COSMIC MAN AND MAGNETIC HEALING

by
Simon Goodman

© 1986 Simon Goodman

Introduction

This paper arose out of the need to provide to a group of beginners both a description and the methodology of magnetic healing. Accordingly, as the hermetic view of cosmology would be outside the experience of the average reader, I have thought it necessary to go into detail regarding the vibrational aspects of manifestation. Though this may prove tedious reading for many metaphysicians, I feel it is essential that such background is understood when carrying out any technique of psychic healing.

For further study in this field, I would recommend

"The Cosmic Doctrine" by Dione Fortune

"The Tarot" by Mouni Sadhu

"Initiation Into Hermetics" by Franz Bardon

For a most comprehensive review of the various forms of alternate healing, I would refer the reader to

"The Christos Experiment : Health and Healing"

by Jacqueline and Nicholas Parkhurst

Any comments or queries on the following work is welcomed, to

Simon Goodman
P.O. Box 1350
WODEN A.C.T. 2606
AUSTRALIA

NOTE : For ease of writing I use the term "man" to denote the human race, and "he" to denote an individual of humanity. Where specific gender is required, I will employ "male" or "female" as appropriate.

THE COSMIC MAN AND MAGNETIC HEALING

Matter and Energy - The Cosmic View

The total sum of matter and energy in the Universe is constant. There is also a constant change from one to another. Matter is energy of a low vibrational rate. Levels of being i.e. matter, are therefore merely expressions of energy. There are many differing energy levels.

There is in the Universe an energy which is of a high vibrational rate. It permeates all. It responds to magnetic and electrical fields. It interacts with other energy fields. By Eastern Schools it is called "prana"; by the Western Schools it is called "aethyr". It is known also by many other names - "odic energy", "cosmic energy", "orgonal energy", or simply "Force". I will call it etheric energy.

Everywhere the various energies interact, and at certain times their interaction produces certain effects, the result of which an entity comes into being. When this interaction produces an entity of certain vibrational levels, the resulting entity is referred to as manifestation. The manifestation which we acknowledge with the conventional sciences is called "matter". All matter is the same in that it is energy levels interacting. However, the only energy level which is present at the same vibrational rate is etheric energy, although the amount of etheric energy which matter exhibits varies. The higher the amount of etheric energy which matter independent of its environment (surrounding energies). We have traditionally ascribed to matter of recognisably high etheric content the benchmark of "living", and much lower levels are generally referred to as "non-living". When matter loses etheric energy such as to fall below certain criteria levels (regarded as behaviour or environmental interaction) we say the matter is "dead", distinguishing it from other matter which has not so suffered the energy loss.

What orders the interaction of various energies to create manifestation is outside the scope of this present work. I will address only the problem of when the energies become unbalanced within the entity called "man" - a condition which we call "illness" - and the manner in which to rebalance the forces (which we will call "healing"). The measure of etheric energy in a body relative to the other energy levels is called "health".

Man

The manifestation of man consists of interactive energy patters which give the appearance of several 'bodies', called "monads". The grossest of these bodies i.e. with the lowest vibrational levels, is the physical monad. This is the body which is regarded by the physical sciences, and is demonstrable to the senses of touch, sight, smell, taste and hearing. At a slightly higher range we have the levels of the emotional monad, higher still the levels of the mental monad, and at the highest levels that of the spiritual monad. These higher levels above the physical are called the "astrasome".

Only the physical monad is subject to the 'natural laws' of the three-dimensional world. It is through this monad that irregularities in the other monads are seen manifested.

Connecting the physical monad with the astrasome is the flow and ebb of the etheric energy. Unlike the other energy levels, the etheric energy moves through the body in response to cosmic tides which are called electrical and in Western mysticism the positive and negative, solar and lunar, or male and female). These tides alternate, the electrical flux being of greatest effect at noon, and the magnetic greatest at midnight; the changeover points are sunrise and sunset. The other monads are unaffected by the electrical and magnetic fluxes, but do respond to the five elemental fluxes. However, these additional effects are outside the scope of this present work.

Electrical and Magnetic Fluxes

The nature of the electrical and magnetic fluxes are difficult to relate within the context of which we are speaking, but some degree of explanation is required. The fluxes are best seen as potentials - the electrical being that potential to increase the rate of vibration of an energy level, and the magnetic conversely to decrease the rate of vibration. Their source lies in Time. We must always be careful not to regard these fluxes as in the nature of potential difference as in the theory of electricity, for in the case of etheric flows the polarization does not result in the flow of energy from one state to the other, for the polarity of one state to the other is directly opposite and equal, unlike the potential difference in the theory of electricity which postulates that the positive pole is an area of less electron density and the negative pole is relatively of a greater charge, hence electrons will tend to flow from the negative pole to the positive pole to create an environment of electrical neutrality. Interaction of electrical and magnetic fluxes causes an action greater in summation of each flux, this resultant termed a "tourbillion".

As the etheric flow passes through the body it does so generally in a flow from slightly above the crown to slightly below the soles of the feet, then upwards through the spinal area to the crown, and through the cycle again. Interaction of the other monads, however, creates various potentials within the body which modifies how the flow occurs. Various areas of electrical and magnetic potential are set up, thus

The Head - forepart, left side and inside electric back and right side magnetic

The Eyes - right and left side electric inside magnetic forepart neutral

The Ears - left side electric right side magnetic forepart and back-part neutral

Mouth and Tongue - inside magnetic Forepart, back-part, right and left sides
neutral

The Neck - left side and inside electric forepart, back-part and right side magnetic

The Chest - forepart electromagnetic back-part and left side electric right side and inside magnetic

The Abdomen - forepart and left side electric back-part, right side and inside magnetic

The Fingers of the Right Hand - right and left side electric forepart, back-part and inside
neutral

The Fingers of the Left Hand - right and left side electric
forepart, back-part and inside
neutral

The Feet - left side electric
right side magnetic forepart, back-part and inside neutral

The Male Genitals - forepart electric inside magnetic
right side, left side and back-part neutral

The Female Genitals - inside electric forepart magnetic
right side, left side and back-part neutral

The Last Vertebra and Anus - inside magnetic right side, left side, forepart and back-part neutral

Knowledge of these polarizations is important for two reasons. First, they determine which magnetic passes will produce the greatest response. Second, they determine the passage of the etheric force through the body, and so knowledge of the polarizations is necessary to determine and correct blockages in that flow.

The Etheric Channels

As the etheric current flows through the body, competing electric and magnetic charges realise in channelling the energy in particular 'meridians'. These meridians run through the entire body.

When an energy imbalance occurs within the monads of the astrasome, blockage occurs in one - or more - of the meridians, limiting or stopping the flow of etheric energy through that part of the body. Illness results. Depending on which particular meridians are affected, the illness can vary from mental conditions through inflammations and body disfunction (skin complaints, weight gain or loss, malaise and pain, etc) to organ failure. Methods of freeing the channels include acupuncture and moxibustion, shiatsu massage, tonal and muscular massage, and psychic irradiation. Methods of repairing organ damage involve chromatherapy, herbalism, psychic irradiation, and magnetic healing.