

Hierarchies are 'bad'. Hierarchies are 'good'. Whether or not one should live within these structures is dependent upon your own, personal:

TABOOS.

The art and science of taboo is the action of negating acts of ego, or balancing oneself in the realm of Spirit.

Examples:

One who has a tendency toward reckless behavior must be very careful.

One who enjoys cruelty must be exceptionally careful to be kind.

One who loves holding power must give power into the hands of those who see instruction.

For each of us, our taboos are personal and only we decide what these are. The person who treads the path of ego has chosen to break their taboos. The price paid is that of loss of power. Power given into the hands of their desires. Question yourself. What are your taboos? Never make the mistake of assuming that your personal taboos are laws for all. Consider how weaknesses differ from person to person. Never mistake the particular for the universal. The saint, who has given his desires into the hands of no-thingness, is free to live however he wills. But for the rest of us, taboo is an important tool for the maintenance of equilibrium.
